W: Hello, students. Last class, we learned that big data is a term for large data sets that can be analyzed to reveal patterns. Today I'll talk about how big data is applied in our lives. First, let's take a look at the case of big data on playing fields. The movements of every sports player are collected into big data. Coaches analyze this data to improve their athletes' performance under different conditions. Schools can also take advantage of big data. By understanding students' learning patterns, educators can focus on how better to teach. Stores are another example. They use big data to study customers' behavior. Many stores can now accurately predict which customers will buy what products. Finally, big data can be applied in hospitals. Doctors can use it to understand a wide range of medical problems patients have, look at the best ways to treat the problems, and see if those treatments are best. Now what other examples can you think of?
